The UIA is pleased to present its 4th Annual Conference on Business and Human Rights. This year the focus will be on human rights issues in the areas of environment, energy and climate change, with advanced focus on finance, contract, litigation, advertising and more.

Why is this Course useful?

Lawyers should be aware of the core concepts and principles concerning human rights, how they relate to businesses' operations and how they may play a vital role in helping businesses avoid involvement in human rights violations. Law firms and in-house counsels are increasingly finding that their business clients seek and require legal advice on the human rights aspects of their transactions and activities to identify, prevent and mitigate risks, comply with international and national regulations, and promote their visibility as ethical businesses.

The Course provides lawyers with an in-depth understanding of the latest issues at the nexus of law and sustainable development; an appreciation of the human rights impacts resulting from business activities at the international, regional, and national levels; guidance on how to carry out a corporate human rights due diligence process; tackling the link between human rights and specific legal areas; and an understanding of the risks of human rights related litigation.

Upon completion of the Course, the participants should be able to: demonstrate a thorough knowledge of human rights standards and the applicability of the standards to the challenges companies face; understand the need for corporate due diligence; identify risk management processes and approaches for undertaking due diligence; and develop due diligence assessment methods and tools companies can use to further their respect for human rights.

Who should attend?

Business and human rights practitioners, business lawyers, litigation lawyers, development lawyers, in-house counsel, academics, representatives from NGOs and governmental organizations.

CONTRACTS WITH ENVIRONMENTAL AND CLIMATE CHANGE IMPLICATIONS AND HUMAN RIGHTS

As soft law continues to turn into hard law through legislation and treaty, soft law concepts that were once aspirational become enforceable hard law also when written into contracts. The philosophy behind contracting is changing as a result, to move more towards the concept of “responsible contracting.” The session will consider the current American Bar Association project on responsible contracting in the supply chain, including impacts on workers, as well as advances in this area in Europe and other jurisdictions.

THE ROLE OF THE FINANCIAL INDUSTRY

Human rights and the financial industry involve multiple facets. Beyond commercial loan agreements and corporate responsibility, there is currently a trend in the drafting of the second generation bilateral investment treaties (BITs) aimed at including human rights and environment-related obligations on investors (for instance, the African Union’s set of principles contained in The Pan African Investment Code). The panel will focus on the components of this broad and complex area.

15:45 – 16:00 - COFFEE BREAK

16:00 – 17:30 - Session 8

ENVIRONMENT AND CLIMATE CHANGE: GOVERNANCE ISSUES

Climate change has become a critical issue for global business, raising questions as to corporate governance and the public statements of companies. On the one hand, companies are concerned with presenting a “green” reputation, but also have to be sensitive to their legal obligation and potential exposure for misstatements. The panel will explore finding the balance.

On top of what will be discussed in previous sessions, this panel will deepen on HR key cases brought before domestic and international courts where a more "classical" human rights approach (through the protection of the right to life, right to health, private life or property) has been complemented by a construction of a new right on the protection of the environment. A discussion of practical challenges for lawyers dealing with such cases and how to use them in their own jurisdictions will also be presented.
